

Blockpit CEO is one of Forbes 30 Under 30

Linz, 06/22/2018 – Blockpit CEO and co-founder Florian Wimmer was recently selected to be on Forbes Magazine's 30 Under 30 list in the finance category. Headed by Florian, Blockpit aims to make crypto tax reporting easy for everyone. The Austrian startup is set out to define the first European standard for cryptocurrency taxation.

In late 2017, Blockpit was founded by a team of avid crypto traders and tax experts surrounding Florian, who is a longstanding crypto aficionado himself. The team was looking for a solution to their own crypto taxation challenges. Amongst a wide range of startups, they were chosen to enter the startup accelerator program of KPMG, one of the world's Big Four auditing firms.

Blockpit's fast rise

Since launching the first MVP (minimum viable product) in Q1 2018, the number of active beta users has grown rapidly. Currently, thousands of cryptocurrency holders are using the service via <https://app.blockpit.io>. The team has also been growing fast. From just five employees in January, Blockpit has extended its team to 17 and further growth is underway. While the developer and marketing team worked on the product and user growth, Florian Wimmer was successfully pitching the company all around Europe. Amongst other achievements, Blockpit is the pitch contest winner of crypto investor and influencer Ian Balina's Paris Crypto World Tour stop.

About Blockpit

Blockpit is a seamless, automated web-based and mobile cryptocurrency tax reporting and portfolio monitoring application. Blockpit uses APIs of numerous exchanges such as Binance, Coinbase, Poloniex, Kraken and many more to link them up with its services. The vision is to allow Blockpit users to automatically combine all their trades, wallets, mining rewards and other incomes such as airdrops into one dashboard. The dashboard provides a clear overview on what was realized in gains to report to tax authorities. Blockpit also allows its dashboard users to generate tax reports which can be legally approved by one of Blockpit's partners.
